When workplace harassment training backfires - Part II

By

Bill Sweigert, Vice President and Director of Consulting and Training for Associated Industries.

In part 1 of this series I shared how a woman attending the training became upset while reading a quote from a court decision in the Ellison V Brady case explaining that women may perceive threats differently than men. She said, "Mr. Sweigert, I think it is a form of sexual harassment that you even had me read this!" She was tired of being perceived as a victim and tired of teaching her daughters to be on guard against becoming victims.
